This training is designed to minimize risks associated with foodborne illness outbreaks and to promote best practices across all food service establishments in the state. Food handlers must complete an approved training program and pass an examination to receive certification. The certification typically covers fundamental food safety principles, personal hygiene, cross-contamination prevention, and proper cooking temperatures.

Failure to comply with these training requirements can result in penalties for both employees and employers, emphasizing the importance of formal education in food safety.

The Illinois Department of Public Health approves specific food handler training providers to ensure consistent quality and compliance with state regulations. These programs must meet minimum standards, including comprehensive coverage of food safety topics and valid assessment methods.
