

incarcerated childhood and the politics of unchilding

incarcerated childhood and the politics of unchilding represent a critical area of study that intersects issues of juvenile justice, social policy, and human rights. This concept explores how children, when subjected to incarceration, experience a forced detachment from their childhood, often through systemic and political structures that prioritize punishment over rehabilitation. The politics of unchilding examines the ways in which society strips away the protections and innocence traditionally afforded to children, effectively "unchilding" them by treating them as adults within legal and penal frameworks. Understanding this phenomenon requires an analysis of the historical context, contemporary legal practices, and the social implications for incarcerated youth. This article delves into the multifaceted dimensions of incarcerated childhood and the politics of unchilding, highlighting the consequences for affected children and the broader societal challenges. The following sections provide an in-depth exploration of these themes, including the definition and scope, systemic factors, psychological and social impacts, and potential pathways for reform.

Defining Incarcerated Childhood and the Politics of Unchilding

The term incarcerated childhood refers to the experiences of children and adolescents who are confined within juvenile detention centers, prisons, or other correctional facilities. This state of incarceration inherently disrupts the natural progression of childhood development and socialization. The politics of unchilding is a theoretical framework that critiques the processes through which institutions and policies deny children their status as children, treating them instead as adults or criminals. This political dimension underscores the deliberate or unconscious decisions that lead to the erosion of childhood protections within legal and social systems.

Incarcerated childhood and the politics of unchilding are intertwined, as the act of imprisoning children often involves legal and societal mechanisms that diminish the recognition of their developmental needs. This framework challenges the conventional boundaries of childhood and calls for a reassessment of how societies view and treat young offenders.

Historical and Legal Context

The historical approach to juvenile justice has evolved significantly over time, yet traces of punitive attitudes towards young offenders persist. Traditionally, childhood was idealized as a protected phase, warranting special legal considerations. However, from the late 19th century onward, the rise of juvenile courts aimed to balance rehabilitation with accountability, though often inconsistently applied.

Contemporary legal systems in many countries still struggle with the tension between punishment and care when addressing juvenile offenders. Policies such as adultification—where children, particularly from marginalized communities, are treated as adults—exemplify the politics of unchilding in practice. Laws permitting the transfer of juveniles to adult courts and the use of solitary confinement further reflect these challenges.

Key Legal Milestones

Several landmark legal decisions and statutes have shaped the treatment of incarcerated youth. These include the establishment of juvenile courts, Supreme Court rulings on the constitutionality of sentencing minors to life without parole, and international conventions advocating for children's rights. Despite progress, the inconsistencies in applying these legal protections highlight ongoing issues related to unchilding.

Systemic Factors Contributing to Unchilding

Multiple systemic factors contribute to the phenomenon of unchilding within incarcerated childhood. These factors operate at institutional, societal, and policy levels, often disproportionately affecting children from marginalized backgrounds.

Racial and Socioeconomic Disparities

Race and socioeconomic status significantly influence the rates and conditions of juvenile incarceration. Children of color and those from low-income families frequently face harsher sentencing and reduced access to rehabilitative services, reinforcing the politics of unchilding through systemic bias and inequality.

Institutional Practices and Policies

Correctional institutions often adopt practices that further strip incarcerated youth of their childhood status. These include restrictive confinement, limited educational opportunities, and exposure to adult prison environments. Such policies undermine developmental needs and exacerbate trauma.

Criminalization of Youth Behavior

The broad criminalization of behaviors typical of adolescence, such as truancy or minor offenses, contributes to an increased likelihood of incarceration. This trend reflects a societal inclination toward punitive responses rather than supportive interventions, catalyzing the unchilding process.

- Disproportionate policing of youth in marginalized communities
- Zero-tolerance school discipline policies leading to juvenile detention
- Lack of access to mental health and social services

Psychological and Social Impacts on Incarcerated Youth

The experience of incarceration during childhood has profound psychological and social consequences. The politics of unchilding exacerbates these effects by denying youths the nurturing environment necessary for healthy development.

Emotional and Cognitive Development

Incarcerated youth often face emotional distress, including anxiety, depression, and post-traumatic stress disorder. The deprivation of normal childhood experiences impairs cognitive development, social skills, and emotional regulation, with long-term repercussions.

Stigmatization and Social Exclusion

Children who have been incarcerated frequently endure stigmatization and social exclusion, limiting their opportunities for education, employment, and community integration. This exclusion perpetuates cycles of disadvantage and recidivism.

Family and Community Disruption

Incarceration disrupts familial bonds and community connections, which are crucial for healthy child development. The absence of supportive relationships during incarceration impedes rehabilitation and reintegration into society.

Reform Efforts and Policy Recommendations

Addressing the challenges posed by incarcerated childhood and the politics of unchilding requires comprehensive reform efforts that prioritize the rights and needs of youth. Various advocacy groups, policymakers, and international bodies have proposed measures aimed at transforming juvenile justice systems.

Restorative Justice Approaches

Restorative justice models emphasize repairing harm through reconciliation and community involvement rather than punishment. These approaches seek to maintain the dignity and developmental trajectory of children while addressing the root causes of offending behavior.

Legal Protections and Age-Appropriate Policies

Strengthening legal frameworks to prevent the transfer of juveniles to adult courts, abolishing harsh sentencing practices, and ensuring age-appropriate confinement conditions are essential steps in combatting unchilding.

Investment in Support Services

Providing access to mental health care, education, family support, and community programs can mitigate the adverse effects of incarceration on children. Early intervention and preventive measures reduce reliance on punitive systems.

1. Implement trauma-informed care within juvenile facilities
2. Increase funding for diversion programs and alternatives to detention
3. Promote training for law enforcement and judicial personnel on child development

Frequently Asked Questions

What does the term 'unchilding' refer to in the context of incarcerated childhood?

Incarcerated childhood and the politics of unchilding refer to the process by which children who are incarcerated or involved in the juvenile justice system are stripped of their childhood rights, protections, and identities, effectively treated as adults or criminals rather than children deserving care and rehabilitation.

How does incarceration impact the developmental needs of children?

Incarceration disrupts children's emotional, social, and cognitive development by exposing them to harsh environments, limiting access to education and supportive relationships, and subjecting them to trauma and stigmatization, which can hinder their growth and well-being.

What political factors contribute to the phenomenon of unchilding incarcerated youth?

Political factors include punitive policies, mandatory sentencing laws, the adultification of minority youth, and a focus on punishment over rehabilitation, which collectively contribute to treating children as criminals rather than vulnerable individuals in need of support.

Why is it important to address the politics of unchilding in juvenile justice reform?

Addressing the politics of unchilding is vital to ensure that juvenile justice systems prioritize rehabilitation, uphold children's rights, reduce recidivism, and promote healthier developmental outcomes by recognizing the unique needs and vulnerabilities of incarcerated children.

What are some alternatives to incarceration that respect the childhood of youth in conflict with the law?

Alternatives include community-based programs, restorative justice practices, family interventions, educational and therapeutic services, and diversion programs that focus on rehabilitation and support rather than punishment, thereby preserving children's rights and promoting positive development.

1. Unchilding Childhood: The Politics of Incarceration

This book explores how the criminal justice system systematically strips children of their childhood through incarceration. It examines the socio-political frameworks that enable harsh punishments for youth, effectively "unchilding" them. Through case studies and policy analysis, the author argues for a reevaluation of how society perceives and treats incarcerated children.

2. Behind Bars Before Adulthood: The Lost Lives of Incarcerated Youth

Focusing on the lived experiences of children in juvenile detention centers, this book sheds light on the emotional and psychological toll of incarceration at a young age. It critiques the political decisions that prioritize punishment over rehabilitation and discusses alternatives to juvenile incarceration that respect children's rights and developmental needs.

3. Childhood Criminalized: The Politics of Youth Incarceration

This work investigates the growing trend of criminalizing childhood behaviors and the societal forces that drive this shift. It delves into how policies contribute to the erosion of childhood innocence and autonomy, making a compelling case for policy reform aimed at protecting vulnerable youth from the penal system.

4. The Unchilding State: Juvenile Justice and the Erasure of Youth

Analyzing the juvenile justice system, this book argues that the state plays an active role in "unchilding" young offenders by denying them age-appropriate protections and development opportunities. It discusses the historical and political contexts that have shaped punitive approaches to juvenile crime and suggests pathways toward restorative justice.

5. Locked Away Innocence: Childhood Behind Prison Walls

This narrative-driven book shares personal stories of children who have grown up inside the prison system, revealing the harsh realities of incarceration. It highlights the intersection of race, class, and politics in the treatment of incarcerated youth and advocates for systemic change to preserve childhood dignity.

6. Unchilding and Resistance: Youth Advocacy in the Face of Incarceration

Highlighting voices of young activists and advocates, this book explores how incarcerated youth and their allies resist the politics of unchilding. It discusses grassroots movements, policy campaigns, and community efforts aimed at decarcerating youth and restoring their rights to a full, protected childhood.

7. The Politics of Unchilding: Childhood, Punishment, and Social Control

This academic text examines how political agendas shape the removal of childhood protections in favor of punitive measures. It explores theoretical frameworks of social control and punishment, linking them to the lived realities of children caught in the criminal justice system, and proposes new models for child-centered justice.

8. Innocence Under Siege: The Criminalization of Childhood in America

Focusing on the American context, this book traces the historical development of policies that criminalize childhood behaviors and lead to increased youth incarceration. It critiques the political rhetoric around "tough on crime" approaches and discusses the long-term societal impacts of unchilding children through the justice system.

9. Childhood Lost: The Social and Political Dimensions of Juvenile Incarceration

This interdisciplinary work combines sociology, political science, and psychology to analyze the consequences of juvenile incarceration on childhood development. It addresses the structural inequalities that contribute to youth incarceration and offers policy recommendations aimed at safeguarding childhood and promoting rehabilitation rather than punishment.

incarcerated childhood and the politics of unchilding: Incarcerated Childhood and the Politics of Unchilding Nadera Shalhoub-Kevorkian, Nādirah Shalhūb-Kīfūrkiyān, 2019-09-05 Advances theorization of childhood in contexts of racialized settler-colonial political violence while acknowledging children's power to interrupt it.

incarcerated childhood and the politics of unchilding: Incarcerated Childhood and the Politics of Unchilding Nadera Shalhoub-Kevorkian, 2019-08-31 Who has the right to a safe and protected childhood? Incarcerated Childhood and the Politics of Unchilding deepens understanding of children as political capital in the hands of those in power, critically engaging children's voices alongside archival, historical, and ethnographic material in Palestine. Offering the concept of 'unchilding', Shalhoub-Kevorkian exposes the political work of violence designed to create, direct, govern, transform, and construct colonized children as dangerous, racialized others, enabling their eviction from the realm of childhood itself. Penetrating children's everyday intimate spaces and, simultaneously, their bodies and lives, unchilding works to enable a complex machinery of violence against Palestinian children: imprisonment, injuries, loss, trauma, and militarized political occupation. At the same time as the book documents violations of children's rights and the consequences this has for their present and future well-being, it charts children's resistance to and power to interrupt colonial violence, reclaiming childhood and, with it, Palestinian futures.

incarcerated childhood and the politics of unchilding: Refusing the Limits of Contemporary Childhood Julie C. Garlen, Neil T. Ramjewan, 2023-12-11 Each of the essays in this collection considers what lies beyond the limiting discourses of childhood innocence. Instead of focusing on how children "grow up," as has been the focus of developmental science for over a century, we ask what it might mean for discourses of childhood to finally "grow out" of childhood innocence? The authors featured in this volume explore this question through critical approaches that actively refuse the limits of normative and normalizing conceptions of the child by surfacing and centering complex, multiplicitous configurations of childhood. Together, these perspectives challenge existing discourses and social practices to reveal how power operates in and through the child and its uses.

incarcerated childhood and the politics of unchilding: Lived Resistance Against the War on Palestinian Children Heidi Morrison, 2024-08 Despite the increasing volume of scholarship that shows children as political actors, prior to this book, a cohesive framework was lacking that would more fully examine and express children's relationship with political power. Rather than simply hitching children's resistance to standard theories of resistance, Heidi Morrison seeks to meet children on their own terms. Through the case study of Palestinian children, contributors theorize children's resistance as an embodied experience called lived resistance. A critical aspect of the study of lived resistance is not just documenting what children do but specifically how scholars approach the topic of children's resistance. With Lived Resistance against the War on Palestinian Children, the authors account for the vessel (i.e., the body in flesh and mind) through which such resistance generates and operates. The diverse group of chapter authors examine Palestinian children's art and media, imprisonment, parenting experiences, bereavement, neoliberalism, refugee camps, and protest movements as aspects of their collective and individual political power. Through these outlets, the book shows consistencies and contends that these children's relationship to political power operates from an inclusive model of citizenship and is social justice oriented, symbolically oriented, and contingently based.

incarcerated childhood and the politics of unchilding: The Cunning of Gender Violence Lila Abu-Lughod, Rema Hammami, Nadera Shalhoub-Kevorkian, 2023-06-30 The Cunning of Gender Violence focuses on how a once visionary feminist project has folded itself into contemporary world affairs. Combating violence against women and gender-based violence constitutes a highly visible and powerful agenda enshrined in international governance and law and embedded in state violence and global securitization. Case studies on Palestine, Bangladesh, Iran, India, Pakistan, Israel, and Turkey as well as on UN and US policies trace the silences and omissions, along with the experiences of those subjected to violence, to question the rhetoric that claims the agenda as a "feminist success story." Because religion and racialized ethnicity, particularly "the Muslim question," run so deeply through the institutional structures of the agenda, the contributions explore ways it may be affirming or enabling rationales and systems of power, including civilizational hierarchies, that harm the very people it seeks to protect. Contributors. Lila Abu-Lughod, Nina Berman, Inderpal Grewal, Rema Hammami, Janet R. incarcerated childhood and the politics of unchilding: Jewish and Arab Childhood in Israel Einat Baram Eshel, Wurud Jayusi, Ilana Paul-Binyamin, Eman Younis, 2021-08-06 This book is a result of the growing public and academic interest in the variety of childhoods that take place side by side in the multicultural state of Israel, despite its tiny geographical dimensions. In a collection of groundbreaking articles, the book describes various features of Israeli childhoods – in the present and recent past – in both Arab and Jewish societies. The first section of the book - 'Childhood and Environment in Israel' - addresses the various spaces in which childhood practices occurred and still occur in Israel – the intimate home environment, the educational environment, playgrounds, and many others. The second section – 'Childhoods and Power Structures in Israeli Literature' illuminates the perceptions and images of childhood, and describes the extensive and heterogenic variety of childhood representations in Jewish and Arab literature. Scholars of culture, society, education, and literature – Jews and Arabs – have joined forces to encourage in-depth thinking about perceptions of childhood in the diverse Israeli society, the status of children in Arab and Jewish societies, and the resources invested to nurture them from a global aspect (as individuals with universal duties and rights) and/or a local point of view (as a national asset, as designers of the nation's future, or, alternatively, as a burden, nuisance or threat).

incarcerated childhood and the politics of unchilding: Palestine in a World on Fire Katherine Natanel, Ilan Pappé, 2024-10-01 A collection of interviews with some of the world's leading progressive thinkers on the movement for Palestinian liberation and its connections to struggles for justice across the globe. As more and more people align themselves with the Palestinian people, Palestine in a World on Fire provides the global perspective and analysis needed to inform how we forge ahead on this path of newfound solidarity. Editors Ilan Pappé and Katherine Natanel have gathered a collection of interviews that are intimate, challenging, and rigorous—many of them conducted before October 7th but still startlingly prescient. The interviewees connect the struggle for Palestinian liberation to various liberatory movements around the world, simultaneously interrogating and recontextualizing their own positions given the ongoing aggression in Palestine. This incredible group includes Angela Y. Davis, Noam Chomsky, Judith Butler, Nadine El-Enany, Gabor Mate, Mustafa Barghouti, Yanis Varoufakis, Paul Gilroy, Elias Khoury, Gayatri Spivak, and Nadera Shalhoub-Kevorkian. Palestine in a World on Fire highlights the centrality of Palestine in struggles shared across the world: capitalism, imperialism, misogyny, neo-colonialism, racism, and more. Each conversation tackles urgent events and unfolding dynamics, and the scholar-activists interviewed here provide invaluable perspectives and insights, illuminating the richness and relevance of recent scholarship on Palestine.

incarcerated childhood and the politics of unchilding: Feeling Dis-ease in Modern History Rob Boddice, Bettina Hitzer, 2022-05-05 This book explores experiences of illness, broadly construed. It encompasses the emotional and sensory disruptions that attend disease, injury, mental illness or trauma, and gives an account of how medical practitioners, experts, lay authorities and the public have felt about such disruptions. Considering all sides of the medical encounter and highlighting the intersection of intellectual history and medical knowledge, of institutional atmospheres, built environments and technological practicalities, and of emotional and sensory experience, Feeling Dis-ease in Modern History presents a wide-ranging affective account of feeling well and of feeling ill. Especially occupied with the ways in which dynamics of power and authority have either validated or discounted dis-eased feelings, the book's contributors probe at the intersectional politics of medical expertise and patient experience to better understand situated expressions of illness, their reception, and their social, cultural and moral valuation. Drawing on methodologies from the histories of emotions, senses, science and the medical humanities, this book gives an account of the complexity of undergoing illness: of feeling dis-ease.

incarcerated childhood and the politics of unchilding: The Palgrave International Handbook of Youth Imprisonment Alexandra Cox, Laura S. Abrams, 2021-06-21 This handbook brings together the knowledge on juvenile imprisonment to develop a global, synthesized view of the impact of imprisonment on children and young people. There are a growing number of scholars around the world who have conducted in-depth, qualitative research inside of youth prisons, and about young people incarcerated in adult prisons, and yet this research has never been synthesized or compiled. This book is organized around several core themes including: conditions of confinement, relationships in confinement, gender/sexuality and identity, perspectives on juvenile facility staff, reentry from youth prisons, young people's experiences in adult prisons, and new models and perspectives on juvenile imprisonment. This handbook seeks to educate students, scholars, and policymakers about the role of incarceration in young people's lives, from an empirically-informed, critical, and global perspective.

incarcerated childhood and the politics of unchilding: Psychoanalysis Under Occupation Lara Sheehi, Stephen Sheehi, 2021-11-11 Heavily influenced by Frantz Fanon and critically engaging the theories of decoloniality and liberatory psychoanalysis, Lara Sheehi and Stephen Sheehi platform the lives, perspectives, and insights of psychoanalytically inflected Palestinian psychologists, psychiatrists, and other mental health professionals, centering the stories that non-clinical Palestinians have entrusted to them over four years of community engagement with clinicians throughout historic Palestine. Sheehi and Sheehi document the stories of Palestinian clinicians in relation to settler colonialism and violence but, even more so, in relation to their patients, communities, families, and one another (as a clinical community). In doing so, they track the appearance of settler colonialism as a psychologically extractive process, one that is often effaced by discourses of normalization, trauma, resilience, and human rights, with the aid of clinicians, as well as psychoanalysis. Psychoanalysis Under Occupation: Practicing Resistance in Palestine unpacks the intersection of psychoanalysis as a psychological practice in Palestine, while also advancing a set of therapeutic theories in which to critically engage and read the politically complex array of conditions that define life for Palestinians living under Israeli occupation.

incarcerated childhood and the politics of unchilding: Rethinking Human Rights Erika Jiménez, 2024-10-17 Palestinians have used the language of human rights to articulate their struggle against the Israeli occupation and internationalise the injustices they face. Palestinian young people learning about human rights at school experience a dissonance between the aspirational and internationalised framework of those norms and the layers of injustice of their own lived experience. Drawing on research in the occupied West Bank, this book explores the three layers of marginalisation faced by Palestinian young people – the Israeli occupation that denies them their humanity; the Palestinian pseudo-state that denies them a voice; and patriarchal structures that deny them agency – to show how these barriers influence their understanding of, and scepticism towards, human rights. Influenced by decolonial theories, this book illuminates how space needs to be created for the counter-narratives of the oppressed in human rights discourse, which may not align with more conventional representations of human rights. It contends that human rights and, by extension, human rights education in the Palestinian context (and beyond) needs to be critiqued, decolonised and ultimately transformed.

incarcerated childhood and the politics of unchilding: Crossing a Line Amahl Bishara, 2022-06-21 Palestinians living on different sides of the Green Line make up approximately one-fifth of Israeli citizens and about four-fifths of the population of the West Bank. In both groups, activists assert that they share a single political struggle for national liberation. Yet, obstacles inhibit their ability to speak to each other and as a collective. Geopolitical boundaries fragment Palestinians into ever smaller groups. Crossing a Line enters these distinct environments for political expression and action of Palestinians who carry Israeli citizenship and Palestinians subject to Israeli military occupation in the West Bank, and considers how Palestinians are differently impacted by dispossession, settler colonialism, and militarism. Amahl Bishara looks to sites of political practice—journalism, historical commemorations, street demonstrations, social media, in prison, and on the road—to analyze how Palestinians create collectivities in these varied circumstances. She draws on firsthand research, personal interviews, and public media to examine how people shape and reshape meanings in circumstances of constraint. In considering these different environments for political expression and action, Bishara illuminates how expression is always grounded in place—and how a people can struggle together for liberation even when they cannot join together in protest.

incarcerated childhood and the politics of unchilding: Perfect Victims Mohammed El-Kurd, 2025-02-11 NEW YORK TIMES BESTSELLER “Mohammed El-Kurd has written a new Discourse on Colonialism for the twenty-first century.” —Robin D. G. Kelley Perfect Victims is an urgent affirmation of the Palestinian condition of resistance and refusal—an ode to the steadfastness of a nation. Palestine is a microcosm of the world: on fire, stubborn, fragmented, dignified. While a settler colonial state continues to inflict devastating violence, fundamental truths are deliberately obscured—the perpetrators are coddled while the victims are blamed and placed on trial. Why must Palestinians prove their humanity? And what are the implications of such an infuriatingly impossible task? With fearless prose and lyrical precision, Mohammed El-Kurd refuses a life spent in cross-examination. Rather than asking the oppressed to perform a perfect victimhood, El-Kurd asks friends and foes alike to look Palestinians in the eye, forgoing both deference and condemnation. How we see Palestine reveals how we see each other; how we see everything else. Masterfully combining candid testimony, history, and reportage, Perfect Victims presents a powerfully simple demand: dignity for the Palestinian.

incarcerated childhood and the politics of unchilding: Unsettled Labors Rachel H. Brown, 2024-06-24 In Unsettled Labors, Rachel H. Brown explores the overlooked labor of migrant workers in Israel’s eldercare industry. Brown argues that live-in eldercare in Palestine/Israel, which is primarily done by migrant workers, is an often invisible area where settler colonialism is reproduced culturally, economically, and biologically. Situating Israeli labor markets within a longer history of imperialism and dispossession of Palestinian land, Brown positions migrant eldercare within the resulting tangle of Israeli laws, policies, and social discourses. She draws from interviews with caretakers, public statements, court documents, and first-hand fieldwork to uncover the inherently contradictory nature of elder care work: the intimate presence of South and Southeast Asian workers in the home unsettles the idea of the Israeli home as an exclusively Jewish space. By paying close attention to the comparative racialization of migrant workers, Palestinians, asylum seekers, and Mizrahi and Ashkenazi settlers, Brown raises important questions of labor, social reproduction, displacement, and citizenship told through the stories of collective care provided by migrant workers in a settler colonial state.

incarcerated childhood and the politics of unchilding: Decolonizing the Study of Palestine Ahmad H. Sa'di, Nur Masalha, 2023-06-15 Writing about Palestine and the Palestinians continue to be controversial. Until the late 1980s, the question of Palestine was approached through Western social theories that had appeared after World War 2. This endowed European settlers and colonists the mission of guiding the backward natives of Palestine to modernity. However, since the work of Palestinian scholar Elia Zureik, the study of Israel, and the ethnic relations in Palestine-Israel has been radically shifted. Building on Zureik's work, this book studies the colonial project in Palestine and how it has transformed Palestinians' lives. Zureik had argued that Israel was the product of a colonization process and so should be studied through the same concepts and theorization as South Africa, Rhodesia, Australia, and other colonial societies. He also rejected the moral and civilizational superiority of the European settlers. Developing this work, the contributors here argue that colonialism is not only a political-economic system but also a mode of life and consciousness, which has far-reaching consequences for both the settlers and the indigenous population. Across 13 chapters (in addition to the introduction and the afterward), the book covers topics such as settler colonialism, dispossession, the separation wall, surveillance technologies, decolonisation methodologies and popular resistance. Composed mostly of Palestinian scholars and scholars of Palestinian heritage, it is the first book in which the indigenous Palestinians not merely write back, but principally aim to lay the foundations for decolonial social science research on Palestine.
